Chapter 1 by Elizabeth

She sat at the computer, frowning slightly in concentration as her fingers flitted across the keyboard. She ran a hand through her choppy hair, sighing softly and submitting the draft. She sat back in her chair and closed her eyes. She should be ACTUALLY working. A journalist couldn't just type up responses to stories for hours at a time; she told herself she could have, would have, should have, used that time to write and edit a few articles.

She shook her head. The office would close in 30 minutes and she was one of the last people there. She might as well take a quick nap and pretend to be mortified when someone awoke her so that she could lock up. She leaned back further in her chair, getting comfortable and quickly falling asleep.

She woke up with someone screaming her name. Except, she wasn't in the office. She was in an unfamiliar apartment. She walked down the stairs slowly, tilting her head to the side when she walked into the kitchen to see a tall stranger smiling down at her. "Morning, Alexa."

Her eyes widened visibly and she sprinted away, hearing the man follow with frustrated yells as she sped out the door and onto the sidewalk, breathing heavily as she ran.

'What the hell is going on here? One second I'm at the office, the next I'm in a strange house in a strange neighborhood and a strange man is chasing after me. Have I been kidnapped?!' She stopped in her tracks at that thought, her eyes widening as she realized the gravity of her situation.

She knew that she can't ponder about her situation any more at the time, she had to get away. Glancing in both directions, she saw that the situation looks exactly the same.

She decided to take a chance and run down the sidewalk to her right, yelling all the while for someone to help her. No lights came on and no one came to their door.

That didn't stop her from running as the strange man was right on her heels, her fear allowing her to run faster than normal. She wasn't going to be caught again.

The street stretched on for what seems like forever. Every building looked the same, and nobody was in sight.

Thoughts raced in her mind as she ran, 'Where is everyone? Why does everything look the same? Why is..!' Her thoughts were interrupted as the man behind her yelled breathlessly, "Come back Alexa!"

She regretted her decision to look back but she couldn't help it, and all she was greeted with was the sight of the man's grin as he slowly gained ground between them.

She couldn't look away, the grin, it was unnatural. It sent a chill down her spine. Her poor choice to look behind her was soon answered as she tripped, her head hitting the concrete with a loud thud.

The last sight that she saw before she drifted into unconscious was the man standing over her, the grin still on his face.

Chapter 3 by Jonathan

She woke up in the same house, same room, but this time the door was locked. Alexa paced the room while looking for a way out when she heard it, footsteps. She frantically ran around the room looking for something that could help, but it was too late, the door was unlocked and opening when several gun shots sounded from the hallway and then a loud thud from outside the door.

"Alexa!" The new stranger yelled. "Not this again..." Alexa thought. She backed up to the far wall and grabbed a chair, readying it for a fight. The new stranger came through the door and, just as with light dark blue eyes and a brown bandanna covering his mouth and nose. Slowly reaching down he took off the 'mask' and said "I'm not going to hurt you, but we have to leave, i'll explain everything on the way." as he started to turn and leave Alexa said "I'm not going anywhere until you explain what just happened, were we are and how you know my name!"

"Fine, just, calm down and i'll explain." He said "First of all, my name is Nathan and we are, well, it's hard to explain, i'll have to show you when we get back to the base." Nathan said.

"Fine, Nathan," She said "But who was that man you SHOT! And you still haven't answered how you both knew my name!"

"Well, that wasn't exactly a man, more like a copy of one." Nathan said "I'll have to show you in comparison to a human, it's complicated. And I knew your name because my partner has a list of everyone who enters here and it knew your name because, well we don't really know how they do but they know everyone's name here." "Now can we leave?" Nathan said urgently.

"Okay, bu-" Alexa was starting to say before she was cut off by a loud thud followed by laughter and yelling. "What is that!" Alexa yelled as she jumped away from the wall.

"There here!" Nathan said "We have no more time! We must leave, NOW!". The he grabbed her by the arm and ran out the door, down the stairs, and outside into the street.
